In her first Chicago exhibition, Carrie Moyer's abstract and organic forms on canvas convey a feminine subtext. Her work focuses on formal relationships, using dynamic colors and crisp edges to achieve a complete composition. While bright hues shine in each work, Moyer's paintings maintain a subtle, earthy quality, channeling artists as diverse as Georgia O'Keefe and Robert Motherwell. Rowland Contemporary hosts the show in the West Loop art district, an area that has seen a surge in local interest, including new dining options and upscale galleries. (CN)
